It'd be trivial to add support for it if you have a usable proxy library. All you have to do is create a custom IConnection which opens a connection using your proxy and register that with MonoTorrents ConnectionFactory. Then monotorrent will create instances of your IConnection every time it wants to initiate a connection and everything will just work.

Rejecting this as it's not a feature I'm planning on building into MonoTorrent. It has the necessary infrastructure in place to make it trivial for a person with a proxy library to implement. It'd probably take less than 30 lines of code (depending on how complex the proxy library is to use).
